A selection of short films from
Planet in Focus Environmental Film Festival

These diverse short films focus on the variety of ways we interact with and affect the environment around us and in turn are affected by it. From the political, to the personal to the collective — from activist video and probing documentary, to poetic exploration, animation and portraiture — each film highlights a different aspect of our interconnectedness to the environment and to each other..

City of Blind Alchemists

Ruben Guzman

A freestyle essay-documentary that explores uranium mining in Canada, the long-term effects of radiation and two different interpretations of time.

Howser in Peril

Tom Prior

Howser in Peril documents the efforts of a concerned local citizen who set out to explore the endangered Howser and Glacier Creek Valleys located in the Purcell Mountain Range north of Kaslo, BC.

Warming

Colleen MacIsaac

Focusing on the interconnected nature of the ecosystems and societies in which we live, Warming explores the causes and effects of global warming across the planet through an ever-shifting montage of painted watercolour images.

The Vanishing Ice

Rachel Gauk

Rachel Gauk captures the function and magnificence of glaciers with stunning footage and interviews with several of the world's water specialists, including activists, scientists and writers.

You Are Here/We Are There

Erika MacPherson

In Iceland, an irreversible transformation of a pristine wilderness creates a lingering sense of loss and displacement.

Indigenous Plant Diva

Kamala Todd

In this lyrical portrait, Cease Wyss reveals the remarkable healing powers of plants growing among the sprawling urban streets of downtown Vancouver.

-40 Degrees Celsius

Paul Davis

It is -40° and pitch dark in a small subarctic town. The phone rings. You bike to work up hill 9 km in temperatures where steel cracks.

Surfing the Waste

Paul Aflalo

Between song and dance routines about waste and the joys of reusing other people's garbage, five young adults discuss the philosophy of living off society's excess.

The Sharing Farm

Michael Gazetas/Keith Berhman/Mary Gazetas

What began as a project to collect surplus fruit going to waste in Richmond, BC and distribute it to the poor has grown to an inspiring community movement that helps the poor and aids food security.
